Why She Left the Louisville Exposition. A Newport numarried elderly laily, the leader of the fashion in her own family, attended the Southern Experition Wednesday. She is, and always has been, very bashful; in fact, she's so bashful she won't get married, and she has had ever so many offers. That was Arkausss day-the day Governor Berry, of that State was presented in the main hall of the building, before a large audience, with a suit of clothes from cotton picked in Arkansas exactly forty-four hours previously.

The suit was nicely placed on exhibition heside Mayor Jacoh and his Arkansas excellency. The mayor made a fine presentation speech, and was in the act of handing the suit to the governor whon our young lady left, took the 3 o'clock train, and came

Was sho sick? No. Ilut the following conversation between her and a lady friend, whom sho happened to will tell why she left:

"Why, goodness gracious, Maryl Back already! I thought you were going to spend several days in Louis-

"Well, I'll tell you why I came back so soon," she said in almost a whisper; "I became disgusted." "Disgusted! And why?"

"Why, you see it was given out in the papers that the governor of Arkansas would wear at the exposition a suit of clothes made within only a few hours from the time the cotton was Homei I have no home-but to my picked from the field in Arkansas." "Oh, that was a novelty, surely."

"Well, I went to the exposition, and got a good seat close up to where the governor and other notables were sitting, and after a few moments I discovered that the governor hadn't tion, and then fixed his eyes doggedly put on the new suit yet, for the mayor on the ground. instead of cure of disease lately perished in Erio, Pa. It was organized go far and wide through the land, founding lodges, and offering free medical attendance as an inducement for taking stock in the company. But, just a week after its organ ization, the brach, who annuled its charter, on the ground that the scheme was too vast and vague in scope, and too liable to be made a great national traud. It is remarkable how many schemes of an aualogous sort have sprung up lately. Pennsylvania being a chief centro of them. The Graveyard Insurance project was only recently squelched; the Marriage Endowment scheme perished before many persons had lost heavily by it; but this Longevity Union has given a more remarkable illustration than any of the occasional brevity of corporate life.

SNUIBING A PRINCE,-When th prince, a good many years ago, made the tour of this country with the duke ot Newcastle as his muster, he arrived in Cincinnati. At that time there lived in Newport, Ky., Miss Mary Whistler, of the United States Army, then, as now, the most beautiful woman of her age in America. The committee of arrangements at Cincinnatl notified Miss Whistler that she was assigned to dance the first set with the prince of Wales. Her reply was that she should be as happy to dance with the prince of Wales as sho would with any gentieman of Cincinnati who was properly introduced and requested her so to do, but that she would be assigned to no one. And she didn't. -[Chicago Tribune.

Louisville has unbounded esteem for the level headedness of the Covington child who, on retiring a few nights since, concluded his prayer thus: "Goodby, O Lord; I am going over to Cincinnati in the morning."

Very Low Rates.

LOVE IN DREAMLAND.

" Drunk again, you see, doctor. Yes drunk again! The same old story, What next?" It was a pale young man meet at the depot when she arrived, in thirties who spoke thus; and there was an exceeding weariness in the tone of his voice and bearing.

The great physician who sat opposite to him nodded gravely.

"Aye," continued the young man, ln the same dreary manner as before, "I just recollect something about it. I was picked up in the gutter by a policeman last night. My front teeth, I find, had been kicked down my throat or out of it-at all events they were gone; but I managed to make myselt intelligible, and bieconglied ont that I lived here. It was a lie-I always tell lies at these times-but I was afraid to go home brother's house. Why was I afraid? I was afraid because I had robbed him, I had stolen his wife's miniature and the coral necklace of his child to bny drink. I have spent the money for which I pawned them, and here I am again."

He spoke without the smallest emo

thing of the student's stoop, and now he bent so low that he looked the very picture of abject misery. The physician whom he addressed gazed at him meanwhile with intense compassion Waiter Clifford and Cecil Graham had "Why, my goodness! do you think been schoolfellows together at Harrow, I was going to sit there and see him and tast triends at Oxford, Graham (the put his pants on? It was awful; it doctor), after passing his examination was shocking, disgusting!"--[Ken- creditably, though without distinction had taken a degree as a physician, and being a man of much sound sense and A scheme for the scientific prolong observation, rather than an abstract ation of human life by the prevention scholar, had rapidly risen to the first rank in his profession. Clifford, wha lad gone through his academic caree under a special charter as the Nationiugh honors, was a poor, degraded vagaal Longevity Union, and, instead of bond, a begging letter writer, a creature sending out ordinary agents like insur- whom it was not sale to receive inte ance companies, its drummers were to one's house lest he should steal somebe "missionary hygienists," who would thing. Yet in spite of all there was a nameless dignity about the eastaway and it was hard to believe that one who in his calmer homs spoke and thought so nobly should be so vile. The night before the conversation just recorded he had been brought senseless to Dr. Graproject was crushed by Judge Gal- ham's honse, a shameless bundle of dist and rags; but the doctor, being mmaarried and free to follow his instincts as a good Samaritan, had recognized him at once, housed, fed and clothed him anow. The same thing had happened at least twenty times before, and Graham was wondering how and when such visits would end.

"Come, cheer up, old fellow!" he said kludly. "I've got an iden. Go down and live with my aunt in Cornwall, She is a worthy soul and makes capital tea. You used to like tea, I remember. You will do as you like, cat excellent upple puddings and help ber to manage her bees and her encumbers whenever you teel inclined. I have get a little estate down there, too, you know, which I inherited from my dear mother. Be my agent tili something better turns up. I can't afford to give you more thun a hundred a year, but you will, of course, live at free quarters, and there is really some very good lishing. Promise me only not to tipple, and—come, is it a bargain?" The doctor stretched out his hand and looked brightly on the human ruin before him. He tried to seem as though he were asking a tavor, instead of conferring one.

Clifford moved uneasily in his chair. but made no motion to take the doctor's preferred hand. Presently, however, he turned his head away, and began speaking lu a vague, musing manner, as though he was talking to himself,

"You all fancy it is drink which is the root and organ of mischief in my case," he muttered. "As a uniter of fact, it is only a graft upon what is a deadlier, because a tar more subtle and invisible, amlady. Since childhood I have been given to a habit of dreaming -of completely withdrawing myself trom my surroundings, and retiring into a world of my own creation. What Coleridge required opium to effect, I could do without extraneous aid, for a time; but I soon found out that stimulants would rouse my juded imagination when it llagged. First ten and coffee were enough; then, as these lost their effect from constant use, I resorted to wine; and, as wine was slow in its effect, to spirits. The more I dreamed the more insignificant appeared to me the realities of life, and the more irresistible the temptation to dream." The doctor, who was devoid of humor, here laid his hand on Clifford's arm, and lafter suffering long with a weakened con- complete cure and is worth $50 a bottle to potity who has a habit of anythig at au considered trifles. He is also a wrongheaded pony, and she will not hear of his being whipped. Whenever the es fits come on you take her out for a drive, and your attention will be fully ocenpied. For the rest cold water shower baths, fresh fruit, indexing books-any thing that will keep your mind occupied; and-well, it that won't do, 'birch your body well with stinging nettles,' It is a very ancient remedy, and I should think might answer as a mental diversion in your ease. At all events forswear the bottle.

"The bottle |" answered Clifford, sad " Itow shall I convince you that I don't care for it? Up to yesterday even I had tought for some time pretty successfully against the great demon, an you will call it, and had only drank moderately of wine at my brother's table. It was the afternoon, that time toward 4 o'clock, when our vitality is said to be at the lowest-mine certainly ls. I thought a glass of absinthe would relieve me, but then it occurred to me that the absinthe would not give me the alightest pleasure or solace if I did not dream over it. If I had to think of the would only intensify my feelings and make them more terrilde. So I did not drink, and turned my footsteps toward home, sorrowful and dejected. It was then that the enchanted eastle aroso before me in all its allurements. I was drawn, or went, it you will, toward its portals, and once I enter there my will is gone. Anything to stay in it a few minntes longer. That means drink. To resume-primary evil, dreaming. Graft upon it, drink."

"Rouse yourself, man," replied the physician with affectionate carnestness Your case is in your own hands, Think of all the wise hold dear in lifeof man's esteem, of woman's uffection and of the world's honor," "Supposing that I like my world better than yours!" replied the dreamer Who knows which is the better, the world of facts or that of timey? Here, I am a shabby outcast; the very children here cry out on me. There, not royal Israel in his glory was arrayed more magnificent than I. I feast off sumple ous fare served to me by Numidiau maids on golden salvers. I drink rich wine from jeweled goblets, cooled with mountain snow. My abodes are ivory palaces, built by pleasant waters, where the white cygnet wooes the lily queen, and there I am made glad. In my gardens the tall cedar spreads her ample canopy against the noonday sun. Flowers of gorgeous hues and subtle fragrance cluster over crystal fountains. The Inscions truit hangs ripe upon the lime and orange tree. Terrace upon terrace rises range upon range, each thronged with graceful statnes, till all are crowned by graceful towers, whence my banner floats. The groves beneath are tall of nightingales and dancing elves. Fairy minstrelsy awakens the sylvan echoes round about, and tiny lutes give answer to soft dulci-mers. The distant clash of fair Titania's cymbals comes from afar, each with e silver sound. My word is power. In my audience halls await ambassadors from subject nations, My laws give wealth and peace to millions, and when ministers, my people crowd about my horses' reins to kiss my feet, and shout with heart and voice, 'God save the King." "That way lies madness," remarked the doctor, gravely. "We call it doxomania, or morbid passion for vain glory."

"What would you give me in ex change tor it?" replied the dreamer, grimly, "Chambers in Pump court of Lincoln's Inn; a Sunday dinner with my friendly country editor or kind attorney, tiil I had grown base enough to be knighted with some city huckster, made rich by cheating his fellow-man or, were I steeped to the very lips in infamy, till I was made a junior Buron in your talling House of Lords, a tool of party, the very essence of a rogue?"

"Wake np, I say," replied the doctor, rather testily. "Wake up and be a

"No, thank you," replied Clifford. 'I would rather return to my slumbers. Lately, too, there has come into my dreams a vision of unutterable loveliness. Her form is all my soul has ever pictured of the beautiful; her voice is what my ears have keenest sought in music; her eyes are tode-stars, and her lips are sweeter than the honeycombthough shape and voice and lips be all of air. Good-by."

"Yet stay," said Graham, anxionsly, or do not, at least, go empty-handed. Take this, and, when it is gone, why come again, 'for auld lang syne,'

The vagabond's hand clutched almost hercely at the coins hold out to him. "Never fear," he said, with an absent laugh, "you will see me again." Then his spare, bent figure went diambling away out of the doctor's house and passed into the shadow be-

" Poor devil |" sighed the prosperous physician. "I must not let him go; he is staggering straight to a mad-house. And Graham seized his hat, but his ervant met him in the doorway before he could pass out,

ACHOOR BYGIRNA

The condition of some of the schools

as to light and ventilation is simply doplorable. Some may be remedied, others will need to be removed and new honses creeted in their places. In several school-rooms the light enters almost entirely from the rear, rendering it necessary for the tenchers to atand tacing the whalows, while the work of the pupil is shaded by his own body. I nm confident that in all such rooms great injury is being done to the eyealghi of many of the occupants. Many some are provided with no adequate means of ventilition. In some the plans adopted have proved failures in part or wholly, while in others no means whatever have been provided save by the doors and windows. During warm weather, when these can be left open, no great harm need be done, but, when cold weather requires that they be closed, the foultiess of the air becomes slmost unlearable, and no effort or watchinliness on the part of the teachers can make the rooms fit for use. Even the ont-door air in a city like onru is tar from being pure, and it is safe to say that, with all our efforts to seeme ventllation, the air of many school-rooms would, if analyzed, be found to contain tive times the normal amount of carbonic-reid gas, beside all the other impurities incident to the collecting into room of from forty to sixty children. During the past two years contagious diseases have prevailed in our midst more than ever betore. Not only have many children from our schools died, but hundreds of others have been interrupted in their school work on this account, It is a noticeable fact that these diseases are more prevalent in cold weather, and it is more than probable that the physical system of the children is rendered more susceptible to these diseases because of the polluted air they are obliged to breathe from tour to five hours per day. It is expensive to laild new school-houses and provide ample means of ventilating the same, but it is far more expensive to have the work of the school broken up by preventable diseases. Visit, near the close of the day, any of the rooms, in which there is a lack of good ventilation, and the lassitude shown by the children in all their exercises will con vince any one how impossible it is for the mind to do any really-good work under snelt circumstances. The brain refuses to act, imperfect lessons are the result, the teacher loses confidence in her ability to interest and ben etit the pupils, and becomes discour ages .- Shool Superintendent Daniels Grand Rapids, Mich.

IN ASSASSIN'S HORRIBLE DEATH On the 5th of January, 1758, as King onis XV, was entering his carriage > cersuilles, a stout young man pushed through the Swiss Guards and stables the King with a pocket-knife. The wound was slight, but all France was convulsed. The assessia was Pierro Jamiens, a tanatical Jansenist-a poor umitic without accomplices, plan or rational motive.

In his pocket was found a neatlybound New Testament, and his purpose From the honr of his arrest to the moment of his death, a period at two nonths and twenty-three days, he was n terture whenever he was awake, see cruelly was he bound, chained and conined. When at last the day of execuon came, he was taken to the torture number and subjected to the greatest mount of auguish which the human come is capable of enduring, surgeous canding by to give timely notice of in-ensibility, Then he was driven by a circuitons onto through the streets of Paris to he above of execution. This took an our and a half. Another halt hour he vas kept waiting in full view of the organitions, the apparatus not being endy. Then, in view of the assembled multitude, many of whom were women, he was placed on a lotty platform and the helifsh work began. First, his right hand was burned off; next, masses of tlesh were torn from him by red-hot pincers, and melted lead and resin ponred into the wounds; lastly, a strong horse was attached to each of his four limbs, and an attempt was made to tear him to pieces.

After a considerable period it was found impossible to do this, and a measage was sent for permission to cut the muscles of the joints. It was refused, and again au attempt was made to tear the limbs apart, but without success. A second time word was sent that the horses could not tenr the dying wretch asunder. Permission was then given, and the unseles were severed, but not until both legs and one arm had been tors off did the prisoner expire, LOYE laughs at locksmiths, and so do those who are bound to attend a circus The operatives of a silk-mill in Pater son, N. J., asked permission to go to the tented field. The proprletors of the mill said the manufacture of silk must go on, and to make assurance doubly sure they locked the factory doors with the operatives inside. After demanding to be liberated several times, one of the cauthouse took a serow-driver and test employes took a screw-driver and took off the lock. The crowd rushed out. yelling like school-boys at regulning their liberty. They went to the circus,
